Kitsura Nines: Doxxer, False Accusations, and Harassment

I did not plan to release this, despite the serious accusations Nines has already made against me. That changed when she began going after creators much smaller than herself. The final trigger was her leaking a private voice call to people we had both previously been in conflict with.

That call included not only me, but people she claimed were her friends at the time. It took place immediately after we finished the LuckyEN document. I can handle being targeted personally. Leaking a call that involved our friends, including my close friend Neevin, to people openly hostile toward us crossed a clear line.

She has not stopped. She continues to escalate. This document exists to establish a documented pattern of untrustworthy behavior and ongoing harassment.

Doxxing

Nines and I were dealing with fallout from the Akemi drama. Several of Akemi's fans were persistently trying to enter our Discord servers to screenshot conversations. I made an announcement asking people to stay cautious and protect themselves, and my moderators and I actively worked to keep the servers safe. At the time, we genuinely cared about Nines and her wellbeing. What happened to her, the spreading of her personal information, was horrible and inhumane, and I condemned it then and still do.

I'm sharing this now because I believe she is capable of doing the same to others, and I worry that I, my community, or my moderators could be next. During that period, Nines escalated things by doxxing a member of Akemi's community. She told me and multiple moderators in a voice call and expressed pride in what she had done. She showed proof that she sent a threatening email containing his personal information from her Gmail account.

Nines has repeatedly said in calls that she is capable of doxxing people and would do so “if necessary.” With her behavior becoming more aggressive recently, this is my biggest concern.

The following is proof of her doxxing him, as well as supporting context mentioned earlier:

VDawgs Fallout

We'd been working on VDawgs as a group of friends who stream and hang out. The moment Don published the site, Shiro and Nines rushed to Twitter to declare it wasn't a group and that they didn't like it being seen that way.

yea people seem to be already confusing it. this is in no way shape or form a group in the way people are taking it. it certainly is not a vtuber group. it is definitely not an agency or company of any kind either. Don wanted to make a page of his friends and promote socials and fun stuff we have done together. that’s it. i am not part of and will never ever be part of any kind of official group ever again. literally just friends with a webpage. there will be no name tags etc or anything of that nature on my end.

I want to clarify this for everyone: The V-Dawgs is not a VTuber agency, nor is it a formal group in the traditional sense. It's simply a website I created to centralize our social links, photos, and updates for me and my friends. The name "V-Dawgs" was chosen through a group vote purely for fun and convenience.
There are seven of us who collaborate frequently and share a very close friendship. This site is just an easy way for us to cross-promote each other's content and support one another. I don't want any confusion or misconceptions all the VTubers involved remain fully independent. This is not an agency, company, or any kind of official organization.
Several of us have had negative experiences with agencies in the past, so this setup allows us to stay connected, collab with like minded friends, and build community without any binding commitments.
Ultimately, we just want to share our laughter, memorable moments, and good vibes with all of you. So please tune into our streams, enjoy the ups and the downs, and cheer on the V-Dawgs the greatest squad of friends there ever was and will be!

That was confusing, considering we'd been working for weeks on a logo, a site, and shared images.

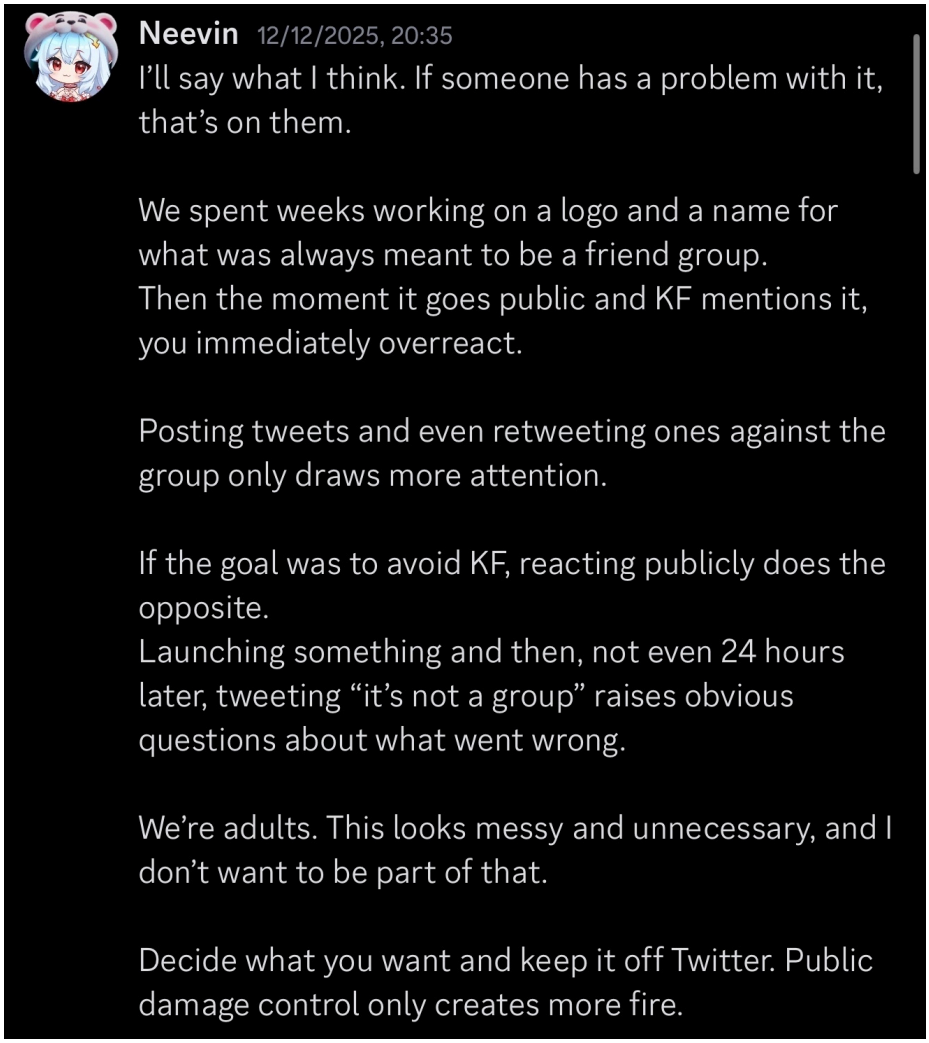
Neevin posted a message about it in the VDawgs group and then left.

Here’s the message:



Neevin 12/12/2025, 20:35
I’ll say what I think. If someone has a problem with it, that’s on them.
We spent weeks working on a logo and a name for what was always meant to be a friend group.
Then the moment it goes public and KF mentions it, you immediately overreact.
Posting tweets and even retweeting ones against the group only draws more attention.
If the goal was to avoid KF, reacting publicly does the opposite.
Launching something and then, not even 24 hours later, tweeting “it’s not a group” raises obvious questions about what went wrong.
We’re adults. This looks messy and unnecessary, and I don’t want to be part of that.
Decide what you want and keep it off Twitter. Public damage control only creates more fire.

This is a terrible idea and is overall horrible optics, especially after what happened with you and the rest in Vtards.
You say it isn't a vtuber group and yet you guys have a website, a group name, and a whole ass Twitter account. I say this not out of hatred, but out of worry and concern. I don't want you guys going down the same path you ultimately put yourselves into.
You'll probably say something along the lines of "well fuck the random internet libs, they can think whatever the hell they want". Isn't this the exact same sentiment you had for Vtards? How did that end? Please, reconsider your actions. A friend group doesn't need to be public. You guys can support each other without needing to slap a logo and a name on it.

You treated visibility like it automatically meant we were repeating Vtards, and that wasn’t true. The issue back then was behavior, not the existence of a group. A name or a website didn’t recreate that situation on its own.

We were upfront from the start that this was going to be a group. Nothing changed except that it became public. Saying a friend group “doesn’t need a label” was just your opinion, not a rule, and it didn’t make this some inevitable disaster. You were projecting a worst-case scenario based on optics, not on what we were actually doing.

And beyond that, it wasn’t your place to say any of this publicly in the first place. If your goal was to help, you would’ve said it privately. Somehow every situation ends up circling back to you, which is starting to look like main character syndrome. There’s a saying for a reason: sometimes silence is better.

After that, Nines left everyone’s server and unfollowed Neevin and Saturn. Neevin and Saturn then left hers. If she chose to leave ours, there was no reason for us to stay in hers.

False Allegations

Nines has made extremely serious allegations against me, Neevin, and our communities, claiming we threatened to spread her revenge porn. That is completely false. During that time, both Neevin and I supported her extensively, including Neevin making an entire video defending her publicly.

Neither Neevin nor I ever spoke publicly about our falling out with Nines. She was the only one who made it public. Because of that, there is no realistic way our communities could have tried to spread anything or participate in harassment, they didn't even know we had stopped speaking to her.

These accusations only surfaced after I chose to end our friendship following the fallout from the short-lived VDawgs group.

Here you can see her repeating this allegation in her server, where many of my and Neevin's supporters are present. She also compares us to Akemi, placing us "in the same boat." When a mutual community member questioned her claims, she tried to argue that I was fabricating a narrative about the emails she received being fake, which that same community member directly denied.

Anyone can create screenshots or emails. That's exactly why accusations this serious should require real proof, not escalating claims and public smearing.

I don't think Saturn is pushing for it. But there are unhinged retards out there. Hopefully they all get banned.

This is further evidence that she was determined to frame these fake email accounts as belonging to our fans without doing any real investigation before accusing us. Despite claiming she has the ability to uncover people's identities when she feels the need to defend herself, she accepted these emails at face value when they were used against me and Neevin.

That contradiction is hard to ignore. If she truly has the capability she claims, it's notable that she didn't apply the same scrutiny when making allegations against us.

Neevin calling out Nines after she allegedly said our communities is spreading her revenge porn.

Two emails sent less than an hour apart, with very similar wording, isn't proof of anything.

Screenshots of emails aren't proof, they're easy to fabricate.

If that's the standard for evidence, then anyone can claim anything.

These people hate me so much, the narratives they twist, and the lengths they have gone to try and make me look bad is actually insane. This is a real email I received. I did not make it up, and I never would. I would never weaponize my own trauma. What the fuck? You can dislike me or choose not to be friends over something as insignificant as that little fake group, but trying to slander me by implying I’m lying about real threats is genuinely unhinged. Rather than disavowing it or making it clear to your followers that this behavior isn’t acceptable and doesn’t reflect well on your community, you chose to weaponize it against me. That choice speaks volumes. Fuck off.

it wasn't an accusation as you can see the emails i have literally received. she literally subtweeted about me the other day and has been talking about me in group chats and VCs. are you one of those "i didn't see it so it's not real" people? and again- the emails mention her in specific. i'm not bent on blaming her fandom. the email would support however that it is someone who is a fan of her. i said my bad about saying her "followers." my deepest apologies. why is she bent on telling people i made this up when there is screenshots of the emails. what she could've said- which would have been actually valid was "this email is from a bad actor posing to be from my community" but instead she said i lied and am making this up to slander, which isn't true and inadvertently is her slandering me. idk what else u want from me lil bro.

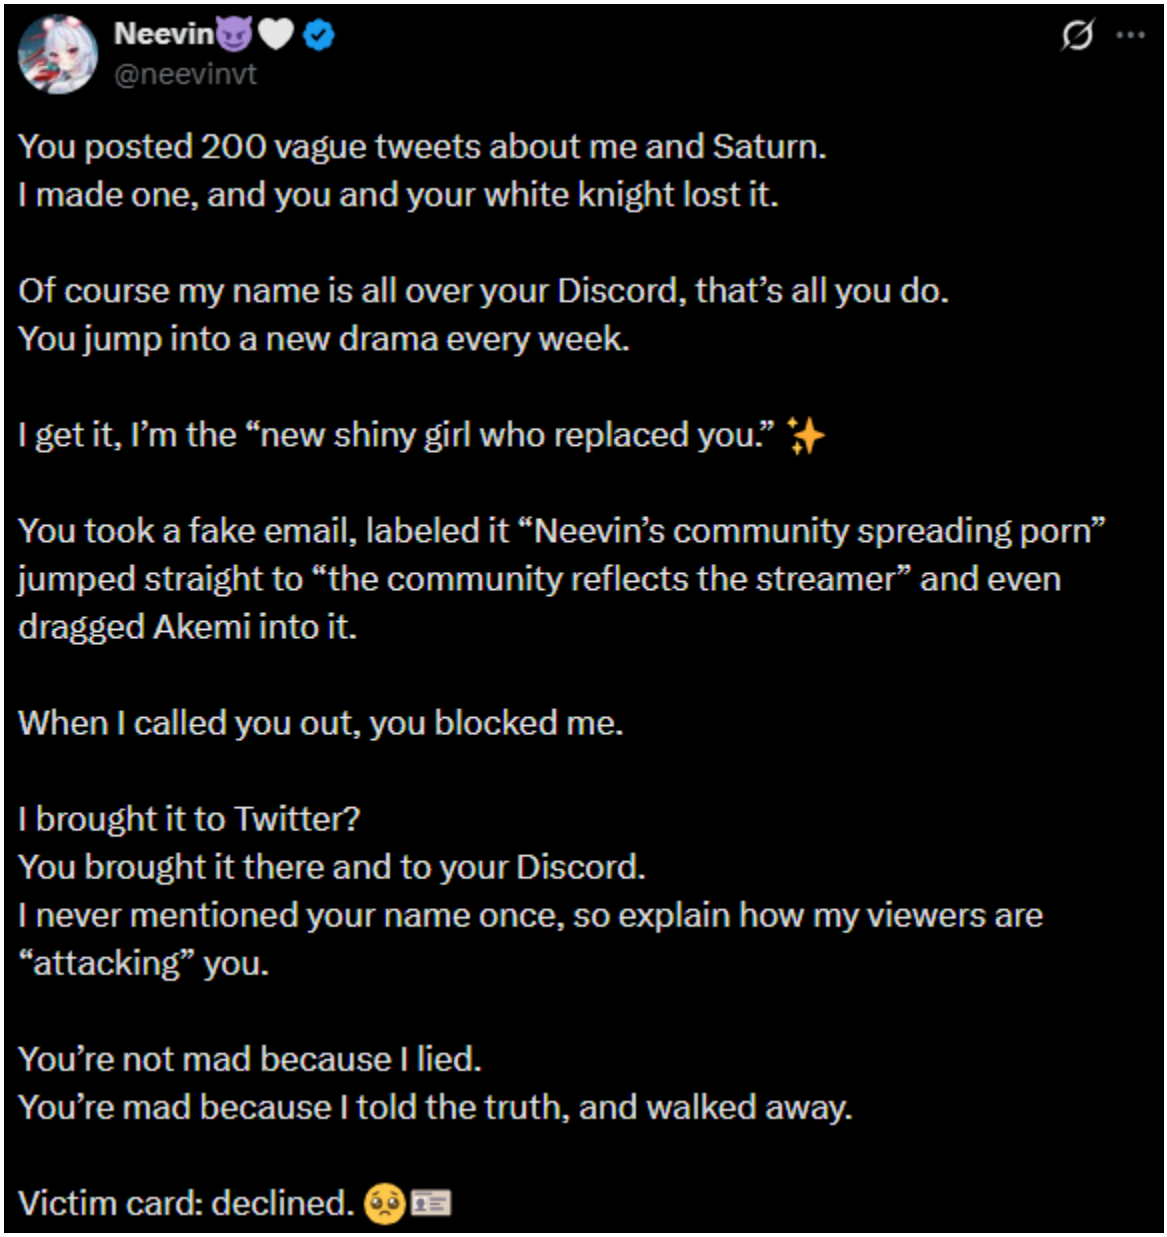
Neevin called out Nines' vague tweets, and Nines responded by blocking her:

https://x.com/neevinvt/status/2000691408521629981



Neevin
@neevinvt
You posted 200 vague tweets about me and Saturn.
I made one, and you and your white knight lost it.
Of course my name is all over your Discord, that's all you do.
You jump into a new drama every week.
I get it, I'm the "new shiny girl who replaced you." ✨
You took a fake email, labeled it "Neevin's community spreading porn" jumped straight to "the community reflects the streamer" and even dragged Akemi into it.
When I called you out, you blocked me.
I brought it to Twitter?
You brought it there and to your Discord.
I never mentioned your name once, so explain how my viewers are "attacking" you.
You're not mad because I lied.
You're mad because I told the truth, and walked away.
Victim card: declined.

After this false allegation, I had no choice but to address it publicly on Twitter and privately with my community. I spent over a day in voice calls explaining the situation and clearing my name. Proof is included below.

To say this about my followers after we all helped you with that situation is vile. I am beyond disappointed. If anyone has proof this did happen, they will be banned immediately. We do not tolerate doxxing in my server. But to make up such slander is really disgusting.

Spinning the Narrative

Nines has this pattern where no matter what happens.
In every conflict Nines has had with other VTubers, the story somehow ends the same way: she casts herself as the betrayed victim and labels everyone else as snakes. It doesn't matter what the actual circumstances are, the narrative always bends in her favor.

What gets left out is the part where she recorded private calls without consent, then reframed the fallout as if she was the one being attacked. Accountability turns into "harassment," criticism becomes "slander," and boundaries become "betrayal."

When we told her it was childish to melt down over the "group" label, something that was established from the beginning, instead of having a normal conversation, she escalated it publicly. Running to Twitter posting emotions 24/7 doesn't resolve anything; it just manufactures sympathy and paints anyone who disagrees as a villain. That cycle keeps repeating: conflict → public spiral → rewrite the narrative → victim arc → audience validation.

And now she’s claiming Neevin is slandering her, when Neevin mentioned her twice, and only in response to accusations that her community was spreading revenge porn. That’s not slander; that’s addressing a serious claim that was already thrown into the air. You can’t accuse someone publicly and then pretend responding is an attack.

LuckyEn drama- i tried to help and defend my friends, that one you could argue I could've avoided. this recent drama- my "friends" singling me out and having an issue only with me- not really my fault they chose to do that.

It feels like you're always part of some drama or friends turn on you. What is really going on here? I refuse to believe all this happened in a short amount of time and I seen this song and dance in other communities I been in. Forgive me but its just VERY odd.

Nines 🐾🤍 INDIE VTUBER 🦊 @KitsuraNines · Dec 22, 2025

the dramas i've been involved in weren't exactly my choice, outside of trying to help people i considered my friends. i joined vtard and everything immediately went to shit. i tried to stick it out, but it started becoming dangerous irl. there was no way i could have known how big it would blow up or how many people would weigh in when we were literal nobodies at the time.

after that, akemi, saturn, and i had a falling out because akemi told her community to avoid us and went through a noticeable shift in her personality and beliefs (how is that something i caused?). then akemi chose to post my porn in her discord, host watch parties of it, and bring it to twitter completely unprovoked (again, how did i cause that? do you really think that's something i wouldn't have wanted to avoid at all costs?).

then saturn, don, and others tried to help luckyen members leave luckyen, while luckyen suddenly decided to handle things a different way and kept saturn and the others in the dark. this is the one situation where i'll take partial responsibility, because i didn't need to be as involved as i was. i was trying to help people i thought were my friends, who less than a month later got mad at me over a tweet i didn't even make and walked away from me at the first opportunity, after everything we had been through.

i have no problem admitting when i'm wrong or when i'm the problem. but in this case, from where i stand and according to others who were directly involved and saw how things were twisted and what actually happened, i wasn't. i don't care if you think that's odd. if you don't like me or don't believe me, you don't have to follow me.

@Nandor750

I don't remember saying I don't like you in anything I have said. I have no problem saying that directly if that was the case. I have had my fair share of falling outs too but not in the time frame you have which is why I found it odd. Idk, I just think private convos work best.

i'm already out of it- but like i said i do use twitter to speak my mind or events spark ideas etc. have you also considered at all that im not the one who brings things public first every time and that i have to say things to a certain degree to set records straight? because i have many followers and a large community and there is an expectation of clarity and communication when shit like this happens. are you even a content creator? like you don't know me or what i have gone through at all. i would've loved to have been dmd about everything "wrong with my tweet" or whatever other shit they have concocted but that courtesy wasn't extended to me. they let tensions silently build and by the time i knew there was a real problem they had already walked out of my life. and i'll be damned if i let those same two faced mother fuckers get to run a muck talking shit on me and not speak up for myself.

not to break my evil character bit but:

here's to the people who have been backstabbed for no real reason, who learned the hard way how quickly smiles can turn into whispers. to the ones who stood their ground anyway, even when it would've been easier to stay quiet, shrink down, or pretend it didn't hurt.
to those who were targeted, misrepresented, and talked about in rooms they were never invited into. to the ones who have been slandered and still chose not to become bitter, cruel, or fake in return.

i see you because i've been there too. i know how heavy it feels to watch lies travel faster than the truth, and how lonely it can be to keep walking forward while people try to pull you backwards. but i also know something else- none of that noise decides who you are.

so keep being real. keep being honest. keep choosing integrity even when nobody claps for it. the right people will see you. the ones who live above petty drama will recognize you without needing an explanation. people rooted in reality, who can actually think for themselves will understand what's real in time.

you don't need to fight every lie or win every room. you just need to stay true to yourself long enough for the truth to breathe. and when it does, the people meant for you will already be standing there.

if you're going through this right now- hold your head up. you're not alone, keep going. this is the part where you find out how strong you really are.

Recording private conversations of friends without consent

The leaked voice call referenced earlier took place while we were working on the LuckyEN document. I won't restate the contents of that document here, as it is already publicly available.

The call happened immediately after the document was released and included Nines, Neevin, myself, and members of our communities, including some of Nines' former moderators. Fewer than ten people were present. It was a private call in a private server, and no one consented to being recorded. Some participants are confirmed to be in two-party consent jurisdictions. Notably, Nines is the only person who does not speak in the clip. She has previously admitted to recording people without their knowledge and states in her stream with Moka that she does this regularly.

This is the voice recording. I have obtained permission from all involved parties to share it.

leaked audio.mp3

Akuma Miko, from the LuckyEN drama, was the one who sent it to me. Seemingly mocking me while avoiding who leaked this audio.

I'm not worried about what I said, I'm more blunt on Twitter every day. What's disturbing is secretly recording friends and archiving it like a collection. That's not normal trust between people.
I'd explain why this is wrong, but that's what you pay your therapist for.

This clip shows her admitting she recorded me without my consent and intended to keep it in case she wanted to use it against me.
nines admittance of recording me without my consent.mp4

She repeats the admission and mocks me for being concerned about being recorded without my consent.
nines admittance of recording me again in the same conversation.mp4

Despite this breach of trust, I told her that if she believed the recording supported her claims, I was willing to let her upload it so both sides could be heard in the conversation with Don and Nachisu Miku. Nines agreed and said she would post the recording so we could each stand by what we said. To this day, she has not uploaded it.
nines saying she would upload the call with don.mp4

Consistent Harassment

Nines has repeatedly posted about me. Some of those posts are blatant and clearly directed at me and Neevin, including the tweet shown below. She attempted to blur it, but did so poorly. When someone commented that they knew who it referred to, she laughed. She then said she normally doesn't find death insinuations funny, but that this one was. The blur was later removed Kiwi Farms, and the names became public.

Answer

Laughing about death, and laughing when asked a hypothetical about a train killing two people, is disturbing. Even if you despise someone, joking about their death shows a complete lack of basic human decency. A normal person ignores a question like that. Saying you wouldn't care if we died isn't dark humor, it's cruelty, plain and simple. That crosses a line that shouldn't need explaining.

She repeatedly frames her vague-posting as if it's harmless or accidental, but she has admitted openly that those posts were about me. She also recently made a post about "haters causing drama," which was liked by the same people she sent the leaked audio recording to.

The first vague tweet she admitted being about someone was directed at Neevin. Here is the tweet:

Here is the admittance of this being about Neevin.
nines admitting the tweet was about neevin.mp4

This is another vague tweet she later admitted was about me, Moka, and Neevin. While we wanted to separate amicably, she framed the situation as hostile and aggressive, which reflected only her side, not ours.

Here is video evidence the tweet was about us:
nines admittance of this week tweet being about me moka and neevin.mp4

She also admitted that her post saying “rules for thee,” implying that people don’t live by the values they claim, was directed at me, Moka, and Neevin. Within the past two days, she made another post using almost the exact same wording.

She also tried to vague-tweet about me after the call she had with Don, Nachisu Miku, and me. Because people already knew the call had happened, Don had informed us, others quickly recognized what she was referring to and called her out on it.

The constant need for validation through vague tweets

She frequently uses vague tweets as a form of intimidation and harassment. Despite being 35 years old and having a husband and two cats, she is not a person that works, instead, she spends her entire day tweeting constantly, seemingly addicted to the cycle of online validation and manufactured drama. She appears to use her platform as a 24/7 tool for attention-seeking, feeding off the speculation and engagement that her vague-posting generates.

The posts below are additional examples directed at me. I believe this based on consistent timeline patterns and her repeated references to issues she knows have upset me in the past. This includes her intentionally spamming the phrase “vague tweet” as a taunt after I specifically said in the stream with Moka that it made me uncomfortable. She feeds off the reaction, making indirect references clearly tied to me and posting pointed, dramatic remarks immediately after related events to keep herself at the center of the conflict.

The most recent example is a tweet stating that anyone who associates with a certain “fake name” would be blocked. This aligns with the fact that she knew I was writing this document at the time and chose to escalate the drama for her audience. She weaponizes her unlimited free time to stir up tension, using these "vague" tactics to maintain a constant stream of sympathy and validation from her followers while actively harassing me.

Closing Statement

After three months, you're still fixated on this, still vague-tweeting, still keeping our names in your mouth while pretending you don't understand why this exists. You understand exactly why. You chose to keep it alive. Not every conflict belongs on Twitter. Problems get handled privately when someone actually wants resolution. If you wanted to fix this, and if we were ever really your friends, you would have handled it privately instead of turning it into public drama for attention.

This didn't continue because of misunderstanding. It continued because you fed it. Every post, every insinuation, every attempt to drag this back into the spotlight was a decision. You had multiple chances to let it end. You chose not to.

We're done staying silent. We never intended to release this. The harassment escalated, and silence stopped being an option. Staying quiet only gave you space to rewrite the narrative unchecked. None of this had to happen. This document exists because you refused to stop.

This is not retaliation. It’s a boundary. It’s the point where distortion stops working because everything is documented. You can call it drama if you want. The record speaks for itself.

You’re chasing validation, not friendships. We were never your friends, just another audience you treated as disposable.
